Long-standing grievances and recurrent human rights abuses by government forces and armed groups in Ethiopia have caused multiple conflicts to flare since Prime Minister Abiy Ahmed rose to power in 2018. Hundreds of thousands of civilians have been killed, particularly in the Amhara, Oromia and Tigray regions, and 4.5 million people have been displ. On 28 September the federal government announced a new offensive against the Fano. The announcement was preceded by mass arbitrary arrests of hundreds of academics, government officials, civil society activists, journalists and others. Fighting continues in many areas across the region, including East Gojjam and West Gojjam zones. On 5 November at. In Amhara and Oromia, civilians remain at risk of atrocities due to fighting between ethnic militias and the ENDF's retaliation against local communities. Amharas in Oromia and Oromos in Amhara, as well as those along the borders of both regions, are vulnerable to attacks by ethnic-based militias. Identity-based killings may amount to crimes against. Government forces must conduct military operations in line with international law, sparing no effort to protect civilians, as well as ensuring transparent investigations into reported abuses as both an act of accountability and to foster trust with victims. Armed groups must end the targeting of civilians. While meaningful steps to implement the Co.
